

Why I Want to Buy a Japanese Nihilego Card

A responsible proposal — using my own money

My goal is not to “get rich quick.” I want to collect something I enjoy, learn how collectible markets work, and keep my spending controlled.

MY MONEY

LONG-TERM

WITH RULES

My proposal in one minute

What I am asking for — and what I am NOT asking for.

1. I pay for it

I use my own saved money. I am not asking you to pay for the card.

2. I keep a limit

We agree on a maximum budget before I buy. No chasing prices and no repeated impulse purchases.

3. I treat it as a collectible

The card might rise in value, stay flat, or fall. I will enjoy owning it even if the price does not increase.

The main idea: hobby first, possible future value second.

Pokémon is bigger than “just a card game”

It has lasted for decades and has a worldwide collector community.

30 YEARS

The Pokémon TCG is celebrating its 30th anniversary in 2026.

GLOBAL BRAND

Pokémon began in Japan in 1996 and grew into one of the world's best-known entertainment properties.

Why this matters for collectors

A collectible is stronger when people still care about the brand years later. Pokémon has already shown unusual staying power.

Source: Pokémon official 30th anniversary and corporate history pages.

A real success story — but an extreme one

Rare cards can become valuable, but this example should NOT be treated as a promise.

$5.275M

Purchase value in 2021

$16.492M

Auction sale in February 2026

Pikachu Illustrator — PSA 10

Guinness World Records says the card sold for $16.492 million in 2026. It is an extremely rare prize card, and the PSA 10 copy is unique.

Lesson for me

Scarcity, condition, popularity, and patience can matter. But a normal modern card is NOT the same as this record card.

Source: Guinness World Records, Feb. 2026.

Why a Japanese card interests me

I like the card itself — not only the possible price.

Japanese origin

Pokémon started in Japan. For me, owning a Japanese version connects the card to the original home of Pokémon.

Collecting value

Collectors often care about artwork, rarity, condition, language version, and how a card was released.

Nihilego specifically

I am choosing Nihilego because I actually like the Pokémon. That means I can still enjoy the card even if its market price falls.

Important: Japanese cards are not automatically more valuable. The exact card, rarity, condition, supply, and demand matter.

My “CEO-style” buying plan

A small decision with a clear budget, risk limit, and review process.

Budget	₩ _____ maximum	Set before buying
Money source	My own saved money	No borrowing
Purchase	One Japanese Nihilego card	No chasing packs
Storage	Sleeve + rigid protector	Protect condition
Time horizon	Long term	No panic selling
Review	Check value only sometimes	Hobby, not obsession

Dad can veto the purchase if the seller, price, or condition does not look trustworthy.

Why I think this is a reasonable “yes”

I am asking for permission to make one controlled collecting decision.

I am not asking you to believe that this card will definitely make money.

I am asking you to let me use my own money to buy something I genuinely like, while practicing budgeting, research, patience, and responsibility.

My promise: budget first • one purchase • protect the card • no guaranteed-profit claims

Would you be willing to approve it under these rules?

Sources & fact check

I used real sources and kept the risks in the presentation.

Pokémon — 30th Anniversary (2026)

Pokémon TCG is celebrating 30 years in 2026.

<https://www.pokemon.com/us/news/the-pokemon-tcg-is-celebrating-30-years-with-special-worldwide-releases>

The Pokémon Company International — About

Pokémon launched in Japan in 1996 and became a major global entertainment property.

<https://corporate.pokemon.com/en-us/about/>

Guinness World Records — Pikachu Illustrator

PSA 10 Pikachu Illustrator sold for $16.492M in February 2026 after a $5.275M 2021 purchase.

<https://www.guinnessworldrecords.com/news/2026/2/logan-pauls-rare-pokemon-card-becomes-most-expensive-ever-sold-in-record-setting-auction>

Poke Price Japan — Investment Risks

Explains reprint, liquidity, condition, and market-timing risks for Japanese Pokémon cards.

<https://www.poke-price-jp.com/investment/are-japanese-pokemon-cards-a-good-investment.html>

Note: Collectibles are not guaranteed investments. The record sale is an exceptional case, not an expected result for a normal card.